The marriage was not fortunate; the Princess Anne lived on one of her husband s estates in the country, and they corresponded constantly, though separated for many years. In the round of amusements which I have attempted to describe, the winter glided rapidly away, and in spring we returned to Troitskoe. During that summer we made a journey into Poland, where the princess had an estate, situated near Mohilof. Few incidents worth notice occurred in this excursion, I will therefore pass it over in silence. We reached Troitskoe before autumn had set in, and again established ourselves there in our old habits. Many traits of the dear princess recur to my memory as I write. Her love for every trifle to which affection or sentiment...
