Not illustrated. 1903 Excerpt: . a rabbit s femur, after four were discharged, secured union in four months. Phelps (56) attempted a still more pretentious experiment by inserting a portion of a dog s bone with its nutrient artery still attached into a fracture, but on the tenth day the attempt was abandoned. When the non-union is in one of the bones of the forearm or leg, the other being sound, very good results may often be obtained by resection of a portion of the firm bones, thus allowing approximation of the ununited parts. CONCLUSIONS. 1. Non-union is of sufficiently frequent occurrence to merit careful study. 2. The large majority of cases may, by careful examination, be proven to be due to a mechanical local fault. 3. A small proportion is due to systemic causes. 4. A few cases are not to be explained even after the most painstaking study....
